IEEE includes multimode optical fiber in its 40G and 100G Ethernet standards as well as its pending 50G, 200G, and 400G standards. In addition, TIA issued a new standard for the next generation of multimode optical fiber called wide band (OM5) multimode optical fiber.

10G. Multi-mode light sources faster than 10G were not serial ready, hence the need for multiple streams. These streams are transmitted in parallel over the corresponding number of MMF. (One fiber per stream per direction. 40G requires eight fibers and 100G requires 20 fibers for bidirectional links.) This started the era of Ethernet passive

Since the advent of the Gigabit Ethernet standard low-cost laser-based transceivers have been developed for multimode fibers operating at 850 nm and utilizing the greater bandwidth advantage of 50/125  $\mu$ m fiber. This has led to the near obsolescence in applications and deployment of 62.5  $\mu$ m multimode fiber.

Multimode Operation. With fiber core sizes of 50, 62.5 and above, multimode operation will be experienced. Not only will the light transfer down the axis of the fiber, but it will also travel away from the axis and toward the cladding. The cladding helps reflect the light rays back toward the fiber axis.

One reason is that 100-FX has the longest range over multimode fiberoptic cable of any Ethernet technology. While 100-FX can reach two kilometers using any quality of multimode fiber, the Gigabit maximum range is 550 meters, and 10-Gigabit maximum range is 300 meters on only the highest-quality multimode fiber.

Single Mode Fiber Optic Cable. Single Mode fiber optic cable has a small diametral core that allows only one mode of light to propagate. Because of this, the number of light reflections created as the light passes through the core decreases, lowering attenuation and creating the ability for the signal to travel further.

Comparison with single-mode fiber. Jacket color is sometimes used to distinguish multi-mode cables from single-mode ones. The standard TIA-598C recommends, for non-military applications, the use of a yellow jacket for single-mode fiber, and orange or aqua for multi-mode fiber, depending on type.

The copper transceiver used in an Ethernet-Fiber Converter transforms the signal from a UTP / RJ45 Ethernet link to one that can be used by a fiber optic transceiver. Media Converters can connect to various optical fiber cable such as multimode, single mode or single strand fiber cable.
